COMMENTS OF HAROCOCK'S LETTER

[From the Chicago Times, Ind.]
When Gen. Hancock says: "The bayonet is not a fit instrument for collecting the votes offfreemen," he is only indulging himself in the use of a bold metaphor. Nobody proposes to collect ballots on a bayonet but it is a fair question, though not since 1877 a practical one, whether the bayonet is not a proper thing the employ when shotgams and revolvers and power kniest week the property of the pro thing hemploy when shotguns and revolvers and now knives keep freemen from hold sing political meetings and from voting as they please. Of the civil service reform he says what every one, from George William Curtis to Mr. Plannagan of Texas will assent to, that only good men should be appointed to office; but the only way to accomplish this, indicated in the letter, is the netection of good men to the elective offices by the people. After reminding the public that the war has been over lifteen years, and sentiments of After reminding the public that the war has been over lifteen years, and sent meats of friendship and not of animalty should be cultivated among our citizens, he dispose of the financial subject in the following brief remark: "A sedulous and scrupalous care of the priblic credit, together with a wise and economical management of our government expenditures, should be maintained." Certainly no one will learn from that what cort of financial legislation Gen. Hancock would approve, and what he would vote for even green backers disclaim any in ention of damaging public credits. The general concludes his letter with the encouraging assumment hat if he is elected he will "see that the laws ho faithfully and equality executed in all parts of his letter with the encouraging assurance that if he is elected he will "see that the laws he faithfully and equally executed in all parts of the country alike," but not seen this gives any idea of what sort of legislation it is proper for coupress to expect the president to enforce."

Carry out General Hancous's expressed views and his defeat is inevitable. Yet he is said to be tolerably confident of success. Why is he? Because, and the conclusion is irresistible, he knows that the principles which he so, warmly defends are to be violated, ridicated, outraged by those who can the manner and amport. This is ock's almost total want of acquaintatics with the political quasitohs now at issue before the country. The letter of Gen.
